COACHING PHILOSOPHY :

I believe that a player should be provided the opportunity to make decisions, both good and bad. It would be much easier to demand specific actions from players at specific times or situations, I know there would be fewer costly errors. But playing in that manner would also negate the opportunity for the spectacular or wisp of creative flair that makes the game of soccer so special. Therefore, I will try to provide my players with situational recommendations but insist that they make decisions. It is my job to analyze their results and provide feedback (both positive and negative) and try to assist them in learning from their past experiences so that in the future they might make the best decisions available to them. I believe that the best one can hope for in life is to be held accountable for the actions and decisions one makes.

Another principle I adhere to would be that you must deserve to win. When push comes to shove, when you are truly tested against someone who is either your equal or superior, you must honestly know that you deserve to win - know that you trained harder, longer, endured more hardship, risked more of your heart. I believe this approach will sustain you in your darkest moments. The time and effort required to achieve such mental strength is immense. I will demand such time and effort from you. But, I believe that only you can provide yourself the motivation to travel such a path. As a coach, I can only help you with directions.

I want my players to train in an environment that is demanding - an environment that replicates the game. Games are competitive, practice must be as well. I ask my athletes to learn to solve problems that various situations pose so that their team can win. Players must always remember that practice does not make perfect, perfect practice makes perfect.

A team is a collection of individuals, but for a team to be successful it must be much more than that. A successful team is a group of individuals driven by a common goal. Our ultimate goal as a program is to be the very best that we can be! I don't ask for them to be great at everything, I only ask that they try their best. I heard it once said that it is impossible to train a player beyond a point that she feels she is capable and it is impossible to train to a point beyond which she feels necessary. Players set their own goals. Players establish their own limits. I want players who always look to overachieve.
